Dear Ehud, shalom! Been a while since our last communication. I had a frank discussion with friends from Samruk about the engagement practice for members of the International Consultative Council, specifically the ways different members get assignments for projects. It is claimed that the whole process is under personal control of the PM, who does not share much with the executive level. Basically, he himself determines who gets involved in whatever. It is not customary for the executive level to show initiative, because it would be frowned upon. So, it is a very discreet process and only the PM knows the degree of everybody"s involvement. General impression is the ICC members right now are not too actively engaged, at least as far as new projects are concerned. My reading of the situation would be that you should not be too worried by the lack of specific assignments right now. The next meeting of the ICC is scheduled for early September (2-3 probably). Hope to see you in Astana round this period. Best to Nili, cheers.
